PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF OF THE STATE OF TEXAS AS AMICUS CURIAE

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

NOW COMES the State of Texas, by and through its Attorney General, John L. Hill, having been invited by the Court to file a brief as amicus curiae in the above entitled and numbered cause and files this its brief as amicus curiae.

The State of Texas has an interest in the subject matter involved in this litigation for the reason that the resulting decisions of this Court may well effect the pre-trial commitment of persons charged with offenses, particularly misdemeanors, pursuant to currently effective provisions of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure.

OPINIONS BELOW

The original opinion of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida is reported at 332 F. Supp. 1107 (Southern Dist. of Florida 1971). The order adopting a plan to implement the original opinion is reported at 336 F. Supp. 490 (Southern Dist. of Florida, 1972). The District Court findings, requested by the Court of Appeals after oral argument are reported at 335 F. Supp. 1286 (Southern Dist. of Florida 1973). The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is reported at 483 F. 2d 778 (5th Cir. 1973).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

DO THE 4TH AND 14TH AMENDMENTS OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES REQUIRE THAT A STATE MUST GIVE DEFENDANTS CHARGED IN STATE COURT PURSUANT TO THE FILING OF AN INFORMATION BY A STATE ATTORNEY A PRELIMINARY HEARING TO DETERMINE PROBABLE CAUSE FOR THEIR ARREST?

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Articles 2.09, 11.01, 11.05, 11.08, 11.09, 11.11, 11.40, 14.01, 14.06, 15.01, 15.04, 15.16, 15.17, 16.01, 16.07, 16.08, 16.17, 21.01, 21.20, 21.21, 21.22, and 23.01 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure. These articles are set forth in the Appendix hereto.

ARUGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES

It is the position of the State of Texas that a review of the Articles of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure quoted in the Appendix hereto will demonstrate that all of the due process requirements of Pugh v. Rainwater, 483 F. 2d 778 (5th Cir. 1973) are met by the statutory provisions governing pre-trial confinement, preliminary hearings, and indictments. The Texas statutes authorize the arrest of an individual either with or without a warrant. Before a magistrate may issue a warrant of arrest, a sworn complaint must be made before him, showing probable cause. Misdemeanors are normally prosecuted with the filing of a complaint with the district or county attorney, who subsequently files an information with the court having jurisdiction, resulting in the issuance of a capias for the arrest of the accused.

Whether arrested with or without a warrant, the arrestee must be taken before a magistrate "without unnecessary delay". The magistrate is then required to admonish the arrestee of his rights including the right to an examining trial.

After being so admonished, the accused may either request than an examining trial be held, or waive his right to such proceeding.

The purpose of holding an examining trial is to allow the magistrate to inquire into the truth of the accusation and determine if probable cause exists for the continued holding of the accused. The defendant must be present during the hearing, and after a review of the evidence produced, the magistrate may either commit the defendant to jail, discharge him, or allow him to post bail. Furthermore, it is also provided by the statute that if the magistrate does not make an order within 48 hours after completion of the examining trial, his inaction operates as a finding of no probable cause and the accused must be discharged.

Ultimately, no person may be brought to trial on a felony accusation without the return of an indictment by a grand jury, whereas misdemeanor offenses can be brought to trial based on either an indictment, or information filed by the district or county attorney. Furthermore, once an indictment has been returned, the accused loses his right to an examining trial, as the issuance of the indictment reflects a determination by the grand jury of the existence of probable cause. Without conceding that the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has correctly construed the requirements of due process mandated by the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States in Pugh v. Rainwater, supra, it appears that the Texas procedure outlined in the statutes contained in the Appendix already provide for a determination of probable cause through an examining trial if the arrestee should request such an examining trial. This is particularly true of a person who is arrested and charged with a felony. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals described the function of the examining trial in Harris v. State, 457 S. W. 2d 903 (Tex. Crim. App. 1970):

> "Though the preliminary hearing provided for in Article 16.01, V. A. C. C. P., may be a practical tool for discovery by the defendant, the primary justification for its existence is to protect the innocent defendant from incarceration on a totally baseless accusation. Therefore, before the accused may be held for grand jury action, our statutes require the prosecution to justify his incarceration by proving in an examining trial before a magistrate that there is probable cause to believe the accused committed the offense charged."

In the same case the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals goes on to say:

> "If the grand jury returns a true bill prior to the time that an examining trial is held, the principle purpose and justification of such hearing has been satisfied. See Vincent v. United States, 337 F. 2d 891 (8th Cir.), cert. den. 380 U. S. 988, 85 S. Ct. 1363 14 L. Ed. 2d 281. Action by a grand jury in returning the indictment supersedes the complaint procedure and eliminates the necessity of an examining trial. Jaben v. United States, 381 U. S. 214, 85 S. Ct. 1365, 14 L. Ed. 2d 345; State v. Wiggleworth, 18 Ohio St. 2d 171, 248 N. E. 2d 607."

Furthermore, the Respondent in the instant case does not contend that a probable cause hearing is required after indictment. Page 2 of Respondents' Brief.

The arrest and detention of a person accused of committing a misdemeanor in the State of Texas presents a somewhat different matter. A reading of Article 16.01, V. A. C. C. P., would seem to indicate that an examining trial is available to every person charged with an offense whether it be of the grade of felony or misdemeanor. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals however has concluded otherwise in Ex Parte Clark, 417 S. W. 2d 402 (Tex. Crim. App. 1967). In this case the Court said:

> "We do not construe Article 16.01 of the 1965 Code as guaranteeing to an accused the right to an examining trial in a misdemeanor case. See: Ex Parte Way, 48 Tex. Crim. Reports, 584, 89 S. W. 1075, wherein it was held that under the 1925 Code there was no necessity for an examining trial in a misdemeanor case. Further, there is no showing that Appellant requested or was denied an examining trial."

From the foregoing quoted language it is impossible to predict what the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals would hold in the event that an examining trial in a misdemeanor case was requested by the accused. Furthermore, the above quoted language was recited by the courts prior to the decisions in this Court which emphasized the importance of providing a probable cause hearing to satisfy due process requirements.

Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U. S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, (1972); Chadwick v. Pampa, 407 U. S. 345, 92 S. Ct. 2119, (1972); Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U. S. 67, 92 S. Ct. 1983 (1972); and Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U. S. 645, 92 S. Ct. 1208 (1972).

On the other hand, if the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals should continue to adhere to the position taken in Clark, supra, a person charged with a misdemeanor in Texas could very well continue to be held in confinement without the availability of the examining trial provided for in Article 16.01, V. A. C. C. P., or the preliminary hearing mandated by Pugh v. Rainwater, supra.

In this posture then does the failure to accord to each person charged with a misdemeanor an automatic preliminary hearing or examining trial amount to a deprivation of due process? The State of Texas submits that the answer to this question should be in the negative for two reasons:

1) That in the case of each person who is confined pursuant to a warrant of arrest issued after being charged with a misdemeanor may challenge his incarceration by way of writ of habeas corpus pursuant to the provision of Article 11.09, V. A. C. C. P.
2) That the contentions of the Respondent are in reality a challenge upon the fact of confinement and should therefore be disposed of by a writ of habeas corpus rather than by bringing an action under the Civil Rights Act, 42 U. S. C. A. § 1983.

From a reading of Articles 11.09 and 11.40, V. A. C. C. P., it is apparent that a person charged with a misdemeanor in Texas is entitled to test the validity of his pre-trial confinement by an application for writ of habeas corpus. In the instant case in arguing before this Court, counsel for the Respondent admitted that if he had the writ of habeas corpus available to him he would not be before the Court. On the other hand, they argued that the person confined must not only have some remedy but he must also have it provided to him by the State automatically. At another point in his argument he contended that he was not contesting the fact of confinement but that he was seeking only a hearing before the magistrate to determine probable cause. It seems absurd to say that you are not seeking release from confinement while at the same time demanding a hearing before a magistrate to determine probable cause for continued retention. It is submitted that this argument was fashioned by Respondent in order to avoid the consequences of Preiser v. Rodriguez, ___ U. S. ___, 93 S. ct., 1827 (1973).

In Preiser v. Rodriguez, this Court held:

> "Upon that question, we hold today that when a state prisoner is challenging the very fact or duration of his physical imprisonment, and the release he seeks is a determination that he is entitled to immediate or more speedy release from that imprisonment, his sole federal remedy is a writ of habeas corpus."

It seems clear that in demanding a due process hearing for a determination of probable cause, Respondent is in essence seeking to challenge the very fact of his confinement. What other purpose could be served by a determination of probable cause at that juncture? The answer and the only answer is that he is seeking his release from confinement and that his remedy is therefore by writ of habeas corpus. If in fact there is no viable opportunity for a writ of habeas corpus in the State of Florida the remedy of Respondent is to petition by way of federal habeas corpus alleging the absence of such a remedy in the state court for the assumption of jurisdiction by the federal court. This it seems is the clear meaning of Preiser v. Rodriguez. In the State of Texas there is available to a pre-trial detainee the opportunity to bring a writ of habeas corpus and therefore the rationale of Preiser v. Rodriguez, would demand that he exhaust his remedies in the state court prior to seeking relief in the federal courts.

To entertain this suit as a civil rights suit and to grant the relief sought by Respondent in the instant case, will be to have the Supreme Court to prescribe the Code of Ciminal Procedure for various states. This avenue was specifically rejected by this Court in Morrissey v. Brewer, supra, wherein it was said:

> "We cannot write a Code of Procedure; that is the responsibility of each state. Most states have done so by legislation, others by judicial decision usually on due process grounds. Our task is limited to deciding the minimum requirements of the due process."

The quoted portion of the decision in Morrissey v. Brewer concerns itself with the due process requirements of parole revocation proceedings. It is significant that the due process requirements of Morrissey v. Brewer were raised by way of habeas corpus. In Preiser v. Rodriguez this Court cites a wide variety of challenges to confinement as being properly raised by way of habeas corpus:

> "Thus, whether the petitioner's challenge to his custody is that the statute under which he stands convicted is unconstitutional, as in Ex parte Siebold, supra; that he has been imprisoned prior to trial on account of a defective indictment against him, as in Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 6 S. Ct. 734, 29 L. Ed. 868 (1886); think he is unlawfully confined in the wrong institution, as in re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 14 S. Ct. 323, 38 L. Ed. 149 (1894), and Humphrey v. Cady, 405 U. S. 504, 92 S. Ct. 1048, 31 L. Ed. 2d 394 (1972); that he was denied his constitutional rights at trial, as in Johnson v. Zerbst, supra; that his guilty plea was invalid as in Von Moltke v. Gilies, 332 U. S. 708, 68 S. Ct. 316, 92 L. Ed. 309 (1948); that he is being unlawfully detained by the Executive or the military, as in Parisi v. Davidson, 405 U. S. 34 92 S. Ct. 815, 31 L. Ed. 2d 17 (1972); or that his parole was unlawfully revoked causing him to be recarcerated in prison, as in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U. S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972) - in each case his grievance is that he is being unlawfully subjected to physical restraint, and in each case habeas corpus has been accepted as the specific instrument to obtain release from such confinement."

It is respectfully submitted that all challenges to pre-trial commitment procedures should be raised by writs of habeas corpus according to the rationale of Preiser v. Rodriguez. The decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit should be reversed for the reason that it has utilized the wrong vehicle, 42 U. S. C. A. 1983, in attempting to impose its view of due process requirements upon the individual states.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Amicus respectfully urges this Court to reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this cause.

Respectfully submitted,
